Rev., November 1935

A I D S F O R B I R D S S T U D E N T S

Prepared in the Division of Wildlife Research

The following bibliography is planned to assist bird students in selecting material to suit their purposes, from the bewildering mass of ornithological literature. Several of the books cited are now out of print, but the majority of those listed may be consulted in public or institutional libraries. Some may be purchased at second-hand book stores. In some of the books listed will be found bibliographies on special subjects that will assist in the study of particular phases of bird life.

PARTIAL LIST OF PUBLICATIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

(The publications listed in this group marked with a star (*) can be obtained only by purchase from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington, D. FIELD GLASSES OR PRISM BINOCULARS, TELESCOPES, AND TAXIDERMISTS' AND
GENERAL NATURALISTS' SUPPLIES

The terms field glasses and prism binoculars, while referring to different instruments, have come to be used interchangeably, and are so used here.

The amateur bird watcher will find that opera glasses, though an aid, fall short of providing sufficient enlargement for identification. It does not pay to buy cheap, low-power glasses when investing in a new pair. We recommend the purchase, therefore, through reliable sources, of a pair of not lower than 6, 7, or 8-power prism binoculars having as wide a field of vision as possible.

As binoculars are expensive it is much better to compare several pairs and make before buying. Many advanced bird students supplement field glasses with a telescope because of its long range and greater magnifications, despite the need of setting up a tripod or rest for its use.

Bausch & Lomb, Rochester, N. Y. (Field glasses, telescopes.)

M. Abbott Frazar Co., 87 Sudbury St., Boston, Mass.

Benjamin Hoag, Garfield, N. Y.
